

SCOTT SMITH

HARRY BACAS

2 at The Star Appointed To New Editor Posts

Appointments to two new editorial positions at The Star were announced today by Newbold Joyes, editor.

Harry Bacas, city editor, has been named an assistant managing editor and Scott Smith, principal assistant national editor, has become metropolitan editor.

Bacas, 48, will direct and expand coverage of theater, movies, books, art, music, dance and other cultural topics.

Smith, 31, will direct news coverage in the District, Maryland and Virginia.

Since joining The Star in 1951 as a copy boy, Bacas has been a reporter, assistant city editor and editor of the Sunday magazine. He received a bachelor of arts degree from the University of Maryland, where he later did graduate work and taught. He also taught at Mills College in Oakland, Calif.

Smith joined The Star in 1964 as a copy editor and became assistant to the copy desk chief. He was transferred after two years to the national news desk. He has a bachelor of arts degree from Lafayette College in Easton, Pa. Smith began his newspaper career at the Allentown (Pa.) Morning Call. He has taught journalism at American University and attended Stanford University in Palo Alto, Calif., during the last academic year under a Professional Journalism Fellowship.
